

I have two XM radios, and feel quite strongly about the FCC trying to impose limits on a paid subscription sight. I subscribe because I know that I can receive traffic and wheather reports for the area I am traveling, rather than having to rely on the local stations to provide that information which requires me to search the stations until I can find one that even gives that information, and is somewhat dangerous because it distracts my attention from the road. The other point I would like to make is about the signs along the interstate highways giving the frequency of stations that provide information, do the stations pay the Dept. of Transportation for the advertising? I enjoy my XM radio in my car very much and I feel XM radio provides me travel information and listening pleasure that I'm paying for, I don't feel someone should have the right to limit what is broadcast on XM radio any more than limiting any type of broadcast music or information. Thank you for giving me the opportunity to express my opinion. Randy Jordan
